INTRODUCTION

Stefania Ravazzi is based in the University of Turin, Dep. of Culture, politics and society. She has worked in local, national and international research groups and collaborates with public institutions (municipalities, provinces, metropolitan areas, regions and with the Civil Service Department at the Presidency of the Council of Ministers) and third-sector organizations (some foundations of banking origin and non-governmental organizations like the National Centre for the study of urban policies). Most recent publications concern emergency policies, processes of citizen involvement in environmental policies and the implementation of food policies in metropolitan areas. She is currently writing a book on improvisation in emergency response policies and she is involved in a European project on robustness in emergency policies and in a National project on the use of deliberative methods in restorative justice on environmental disasters.

Her teaching activity began in 2005. Since then, she has taught Political Science, Public Management, Game Theory and Theory and Practice of Deliberation in bachelor and master programmes and in specialisation and training courses held by national (National School of Administration - Presidency of the Council of Ministers) and international (Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development) institutions. Since 2014, she has regularly taught Public Policy Analysis (Bachelor programmes in Political and Social Sciences and Intercultural Communication), Governing Cities (Master programmes in Government Sciences and Sociology) and Governance and Alternative Conflict Management (Master programmes in Government Sciences and International Sciences) at the University of Turin.

She directs the Laboratory of Public Policies (www.lapo.unito.it), that works with public administrations to design and manage collaborative governance processes applying deliberative methods and to evaluate the implementation of policies.

She is member of the Standing groups 'Democratic Innovations', 'Local government and politics' and 'Theoretical perspectives in policy analysis' of the European Consortium of Political Research, and member of the Standing groups 'Political Science and Public policy', 'Social movements and political participation' and 'Regional studies and local policies' of the Italian Political Science Association.

From January 2021 to September 2023, she was member of the National Commission for the Public Debates on major public works (Commissione Nazionale per i Dibattiti Pubblici sulle grandi opere).
